"Negotiation" involves finding a balance between reaching the best possible result and establishing a mutually beneficial working relationship with your counterparts at the same time. Many negotiation researches emphasize inventing (1) for mutual gain rather than negotiating on a win-lose basis. The former tries to expand the pie by discovering new options, (2) the latter sees negotiations as fixed pie where the more one side wins, the more the other side loses. It is (3) to lock yourself into a fixed position because that will prevent you from finding (4) that will be mutually beneficial. Therefore, how to create a win-win situation becomes an (5) method for negotiation.

E. Reading Comprehension: 10%

The police chief in Tacoma, Wash. shot and killed his wife after years of abusing her. This news surprised everyone and revealed how serious the domestic violence problems are. While police officers today are more aware of the problem, the following is also true: In many departments, an officer will automatically be fired for a positive marijuana test, but can stay on the job without any punishment after abusing a significant other.

In the wake of the Tacoma killing, the international Association of Police strengthened its efforts to persuade police departments to adopt a set of rules of domestic violence. Responding to concerns that this violence had long been treated more leniently than other forms of misconduct, the organization called for zero tolerance for abusers, tougher pre-employment screening and a separate set of procedures to ensure rigorous investigation of every accusation. However, until now, only Nashville, Tennessee has adopted the entire policy while others just ignore to arrest their colleague who commits the crime of domestic violence.
