A Dangerous Cook

¹When my friend Tom sets to work in the kitchen, disaster often results. ²Once he tried to make toasted cheese sandwiches for us by putting slices of cheese in the toaster along with the bread; he ruined the toaster. ³Unfortunately, the toaster was a fairly new one that I had just bought for him three weeks before, on his birthday. ⁴On another occasion, he had cut up some fresh beans and put them in a pot to steam. ⁵I was really looking forward to the beans, for I eat nothing but canned vegetables in my dormitory. ⁶I, frankly, am not much of a cook either. ⁷The water in the Teflon pan steamed away while Tom was on the telephone, and both the beans and the Teflon coating in the pan were ruined. ⁸Finally, another time Tom made spaghetti for us, and the noodles stuck so tightly together that we had to cut off slices with a knife and fork. ⁹In addition, the meatballs were burned on the outside but almost raw inside. ¹⁰The tomato sauce, on the other hand, turned out well. ¹¹For some reason, Tom is very good at making meat and vegetable sauces. ¹²Because of Tom's kitchen mishaps, I never eat at his place without an Alka-Seltzer in my pocket, or without money in case we have to go out to eat.
