

Acknowledgement

I would like to express my gratitude to all those who help me to complete this thesis. Without their help and support, I would never have been able to complete such a huge task.

First of all, I want to especially thank my thesis advisor, Professor Frank W. Stevenson, for his helpful advices and patient guidance. During the process of completing my thesis, Professor Stevenson provided me with inspiration of one sort or another through the course of several beneficial discussions, particularly about postmodern theory and Bakhtinian theory. We have exchanged many ideas in these discussions and I learned a lot from my advisor.

I am also indebted to Professor Ting and Professor Keating, who gave me much helpful advices at the thesis defense. With their help I have been able to improve the thesis. Moreover, I have learned literary theories from the courses I took with Dr. Ting, and I have learned about Western history and religion from Dr. Keating. These have all play a role in my thesis.

Finally, I would like to give my special thank to my family, my mother and my brother, whose patient love enabled me to complete this thesis. Their encouragement was critical when I felt weak and frustrated.
